Living in a place means making it your own. Opening the door to voices from its past is to listen to its story.

Paris, Left Bank. Her heart beats faster. In this little corner of the world, she feels a little less lost. There, where the mist of fiction threatens to swallow reality – that is her home, her Paris Fantasy. A certain impalpable something in the air makes her heart beat in time with legends and the centuries, makes her feel part of a mythical space and time. Fascinated by the Rue Férou, born five hundred years ago between Place Saint-Sulpice and the Jardin du Luxembourg, Lydia Flem recounts the story of the men and women who lived there from one century to the next, one street number to the next, one story to the next.
