A story to question how we live and remind us of what is truly important.

The day begins like any other in the city. A boy wakes up, showers, gets dressed, and eats breakfast, but when he looks out the kitchen's window, he decides to run away. Into one giant bag, he packs: three pairs of socks, a tennis racket, an umbrella, a tent, a fork, a winter sweater, a bathing suit and other assorted little things. He heads out and meets all sorts of people, loses all the useless objects he's packed, one by one, and realizes with each loss how much lighter and happier he feels... until he is ready to go home and live life more simply.
