80 pages to help us understand the challenges in store for cities. Greener, self-sustaining, run by robots... What will tomorrow's cities be like?

In 2050, the world will have nearly 10 billion inhabitants, of which 60 to 70% will live in cities. In the years to come, these urban areas will need an overhaul just so their inhabitants can live and evolve in more pleasant and more practical spaces. Housing, transport, less polluted and greener cities seeing to their own energy needs or else managed by robots... What will the city of tomorrow look like?

Conceived by the newspaper Albert, "Future Worlds" is an illustrated informational series focusing on important themes children can see in the 21st century news. Each book gives them ways to grasp all the issues at stake.
