Philosophizing at home develops the child's kindness, freedom, independence, intellect, but also their capacity for happiness.

What makes a person happy? What is good and evil? What is it like to be dead? Is 'being free' being able to do whatever we like? Discussing life's big questions with your child at a young age can be a wonderful experience that can help them understand the world around them.

In this illustrated book, authors offer practical advice and tools for parents, to help them discuss the questions that their child might have, using a method used for years in Montessori schools.
