Moving portraits of three women, depicted with striking psychological realism.

Emma, Angèle, Karine. Three daughters, three mothers, three generations. From one to the other, each woman, full of suppressed but vivid hatred, passes down the fundamentals of motherhood. The absence of love takes up all the space, woven into the daily life of childhood. It takes root, relentlessly resonating in relationships with friends or lovers. The mothers reject their daughters, and this inaugural rejection, far from separating them, binds them solidly together in a long chain that runs through time. How to avoid being ravaged? How to avoid becoming the ravager?
