The future of caregiving is a major issue in the world we share, and one still too little-known.

The subject of much study across the Atlantic, caregiving has also been the focus of genuinely interdisciplinary efforts led by both male and female French researchers: philosophers, sociologists, psychologists, political scientists, etc. Over the last 15 years, a "French school of care" has emerged and gained prominence. The future of caregiving is a major issue in the world we share, and one still too little-explored. This book provides multiple viewpoints to give readers an overview of the subject and, in their own way, contribute.
