On July 19th 2016, Adama Traoré was killed by police officers on his 24th birthday. Since then, a combat against police violence has arisen.

"My brother died under the weight of three officers and a system: he died because he was called Adama Traoré, because he was Black, because he lived in a working-class neighbourhood. The bad France, its problem with the police, colonialism, racism, the school system, the justice system, democracy: all of them are part of the Adama combat." Assa Traoré

"Adama's death is the result of a stifling and finger-pointing system. It is then a matter of using the fight that ensues to question the functioning of the institutions and the powers in our contemporary societies." Geoffroy de Lagasnerie
