An original book that pushes the boundaries of writing history and echoes growing concerns about the conditions in which animals live.

In this book, Éric Baratay sets forth the first attempts at animal biographies – accounts or fragments of lives – built upon what animals feel, perceive, or experience. Drawing on written sources, films and still photos, and his knowledge of ethology and the environment, he pushes the boundaries of what it means to write history, putting himself on the animal's side.
