This beautifully illustrated book inventories the many small creatures that call our gardens home.

Gardens are wonderful ecosystems and home to many living creatures that are incredibly helpful to nature. In collaboration with the Humanity and Biodiversity Foundation (FHB), this book lists over 100 garden-dwelling species, in order to better understand and protect them. Among the species listed, some are familiar (bees, wasps, flies, butterflies), and others more mysterious, such as Colorado beetles, golden ground beetles, and bush crickets. Each insect profile provides facts about the kind of food they eat and their place in the food chain.
