A picture book that feels like a walk in the woods.

A little girl writes her grandma, who recently passed away, to tell her about the peculiar experience she just had. It's November, but way too warm for this time of year. One night, while staring at the roots of a little plant she's been sprouting in a glass of water, the little girl falls in and ends up in the middle of a forest with her new neighbor. She soon realizes the boy has no intention of going home. He's mesmerized by the beauty of the forest (long gone in real life) and the twinkling of the stars at night. There's also winter. Winter has vanished, and the little boy is determined to find it and bring it back.
