"William Augel's comics version of Katherine Johnson tells an inspiring story for our kids. Everyone can succeed no matter their gender, race, or background!"

A collection of strips recounting the childhood of Katherine Johnson, a mathematician vital to NASA's manned missions. Right from the start, it was all about numbers for young Katherine. Armed with logic, there was no wisdom she wouldn't challenge, not even the most enduring myths: how did Noah manage to fit 48,000 animals into his ark, not to mention all that food? Nothing escaped her sharp mind. Along with her brother Charlie and her hen Lucinda, she'd spend her days making the world her lab and the entire universe her playground, even going so far as to dream of a more just society where blacks and whites would have equal rights... and the Moon would answer her countless questions!
