When a family's cat goes missing, they do everything they can to find him. A sensitively written story of family, a gem of tact and tenderness.

The family cat, Amour, has vanished. Édith must take charge herself, as she can't count on her prents, who blame each other. They've been arguing nonstop for a while now. Édith confidently makes a methodical plan: search the house room by room, then every corner of the yard, and finally, if need be, the neighborhood. In the course of her seach, her parents change, and a certain closeness returns. One day, they chance upon the square where they shared their first kiss. Will they ever find Amour again?
