When a very ordinary doctor in a very ordinary town is tricked into doing something extraordinarily deadly, all hell breaks loose.

Paul is a good man. He's been married to his wife for over thirty years; they have two grown children and a beautiful home. Theirs is a quiet, uneventful, ordinary existence. Until Camille, gorgeous as a movie star, comes to town. She's set her eyes set on Paul. Little by little, Camille seduces him; Paul ca't believe that such a beautiful, young woman could be interested in him. But she is, and his lust for her is overwhelming. Camille slowly opens up to him about her abusive husband Marc, who beats her and "shares" her with drunken friends. He even hits their daughter. Paul is a good man. He must do something. But maybe, in the end, he's not such a good man after all.
