Regulation

Understand the economic, scientific, and medical revolutions underway and the ethical, spiritual, and metaphysical upheavals such technologies entail.

The transhumanist revolution isn't science fiction. Biotechnologies can already alter nature (GMOs). This is the perspective that gave rise to "transhumanisme," a trend endowed with prestigious and prosperous research. The same goes for new technologies: nanotechnologies, "big data" processing, biotechnologies, robotics and artificial intelligence. This revolution need regulating. For these technologies have two characteristics that enable them to easily evade the usual democratic processes: they develop at amazing speeds and are extraordinarily difficult to understand and control.
