This pop science book dismantles many unexamined ideas about climate change with facts and humor.

There's no such thing as climate change! Two more degrees Celsius won't matter! Technology will save us! Many are the misconceptions about global warming and play a part in encouraging inaction. This highly illustrated work by two climate experts from the government policy institution the French Development Agency takes apart ten such mistaken views with humor and insolence, tackling a complex subject central to the concerns of younger generations in a well-researched and uninhibited way, making it accessible to one and all.
