This illustrated work explains and demystifies lunar exploration for children ages 8-13, with a view to better understanding current issues.

Did you know that in the 19th century, Jules Verne had already anticipated that humans would go to the Moon? That in 1971, astronaut Alan Shepard played golf in a lunar crater? That many countries are now planning to build a village on the Moon?

Developed by the children's magazine Albert, "Future Worlds" is a series of illustrated nonfiction works that focus on important themes children can see in 21st century news. Each book helps them understand and grasp the issues at stake.
