An anthology of foundational texts by feminists from 1970s architecture: Annmarie Adams, Deborah Fausch, Alice Friedman, Dolores Hayden, and Denise Scott Brown.

Documenting the politics of several generations of feminist thinkers, this anthology gives the floor to a few pioneering voices that spoke out to question the field of architecture in all its aspects: its social mechanisms, its intellectual and professional modes of production. At a time when such fundamental concepts as "gender," "intersectionality," and "queer" are being forged and gradually introduced into architecture, these twelve essays sketch out a collective movement sure to make a mark on architectural letters to come.
