"A charming and original approach to Alzheimer's. Despite its sad subject matter, this novel proves endearing, even somehow uplifting, with an unforgettable protagonist."

Louise just wants to go home and be with her parents. Summer camp is no fun, and the counselors are mean. There must've been some mistake. Her parents would never have sent her here! Maybe she was even kidnapped? No matter, she'll get out; she's determined to do so. But each time she tries, there the counselors are, always watching over her and the other children. Sometimes the others just disappear, without a word.

With the help of her friends Simon and Juliette, Louise will risk everything in order to build a hang-glider to get out of this place. But does Louise's perspective really reflect the reality of her situation?
