"To read Sarah Chiche is to live modestly in the luminous world of intelligence. The world of affinities and alchemies. To read Sarah Chiche is to fear death no longer."

A crazy epic about lives consumed by the demon of knowledge: a drug that withers our hearts and splits our skulls, plunges us into our vices, our depths, our mundane obstacles, our extravagant dreams, our fake feelings.

Our minds are mazes of corridors pierced with clear apparitions, sparkling or dreary colours, soothing twilights of childhood and huge monsters drawn from the mists of time.

We all want to appear to be what we are not, we all deceive each other and no one knows themselves. Yet as you know, you have to fall off the trapeze to be loved.
