Nicolas Robin's black comedy is a brilliant satire of embittered family relations and the darker aspects of human nature.

Eddy has built a solid reputation as a dog groomer, as he takes excellent care not only of pets but their owners—mostly older women! This 40-year-old lothario gets the hearts of his sexagenarian lady friends racing, when he takes them dancing and even invites them up to his place... especially if they happen to be generous and wealthy. But enter Maryse, a former television host with an oversized ego, who soon becomes his lover. Eddy barely even notices the young woman at her side, though she could seriously mess up their little fling. For while Maryse is busy indulging her fantasies, her daughter Chloé is carefully plotting her revenge...
