Landing in Paris after his dad's murder, Connecticut high-schooler Alex must get used to a new culture very different from his own.

"Ah, hell!" Among the few words Alex's father uttered before being brutally murdered in a Connecticut mall parking lot. Overnight, the teenager finds himself in a much-hated City of Lights: a uncle as friendly as a prison warden, an incomprehensible language, a depressing school. Good thing he find a colorful French teacher and honest friends to help him conduct an investigation, uncover family secrets, and get used to a new culture. With devastating humor and an eye sharp as ever, Susie Morgenstern delivers a shocking and elating novel.
