Rethinking the city of tomorrow!

"Mobility issues? Public transport!

Housing crisis? Make everyone a landlord!

Urban sprawl? Fight it!

Proximity encourages community!

Architecture makes the city!"

These beliefs hail from another age, a midcentury postwar France that still believed itself rural and set up a dichotomy of city and countryside. They ignore the realities of an urban, mobile, connected 21st century and are ill-suited to environmental demands. Enshrined as dogma, they nevertheless continue to govern cities and territories. Jean-Marc Offner deconstructs them one by one to help us rethink the city of tomorrow.
