The sea is the "New Frontier" that holds the key to a sustainable future and can lead France to become more mobile and competitive.

With 20,000 km of coastline and 11 million square km of maritime surface area including overseas territories, France holds the second-largest maritime domain in the world after the United States, and the largest in terms of diversity. Covering nearly 72% of our planet, the sea is a multidimensional universe that harbors unsuspected biodiversity and potential.

The sea is France's winning asset and Europe's greatest opportunity: said the Venetians, "Who holds the sea, holds the land." It's high time the sea became the driving force behind the French economy. Democratic Europe will either be maritime, or nothing at all. Let us dare to take the seas and start a real revolution in our French archipelago!
