A feel-good comic full of optimism!

While plunging into depression, Naori decides to leave everything and follow the advice of a gardener who seems to read her better than she does herself. So she flies to Cambodia to help the local population and Rosangela, the head of a clinic. There, Naori begins to listen to other people's lives and better understand her own. What prevents us from moving forward? In this eighth volume, our bodies express what we find hard to admit. Because in order to grow, we must jettison the things in our way.
