In their brush with death, Elise and Louis have found love. A lesson in life and courage that questions our relationship with disability.

At age 27, Elise has just suffered a stroke. Louis, too, has suffered a stroke in the flower of his youth and wakes up aphasic. Statistically, strokes are anomalies for people their age, but that hasn't kept their lives from being turned upside down. From now on, Elise and Louis will have to get used to their bodies again, relearning the simplest gestures. Between frustration and shattered dreams, they will find the strength to keep moving forward. The one day, fate steps in, and their paths cross. Could their budding romance help them regain a taste for life? Despite the obstacles, Elise and Louis will support each other and gradually regain their independence.
